ENGL 2030 Encountering Intercultural Literature Other Lives: Women of the Nineteenth Century

Dr. Yangjung Lee (She) ylee13@seattleu.edu

What kinds of lives did women of the nineteenth century lead in the age of empire? In "Other Lives" we will encounter how women in various parts of the nineteenth-century world— England, the US, the Caribbean, and South and East Asia—experienced, reinforced, resisted, and reimagined imperial projects through their writing. Who was considered to be human, let alone a woman? How did women represent themselves and how were they seen by others? What role did women play in the consolidation, proliferation, and decline of empires? What do intersections of race, gender, and sexuality offer us in understanding imperialism, often considered to be monolithic? We will interrogate these questions as we read texts by diverse women who wrote in the nineteenth century and whose writing offers complex views about gender, race, imperialism that are grounded in their own cultural contexts.

We will examine three aspects of their lives: education, love and marriage, and work. Through our readings and discussions, we will critically reflect on the construction of "self/other" in a world where it was not neatly binary, to meaningfully encounter other lives.

Course Goals

This course is designed to help you develop the following:

- an understanding of literatures that engage cultural boundaries and the issue of communicating across social and cultural differences;
- an ability to close read and interpret a variety of literary texts in multiple genres;
- an awareness of how intersections of race, class, gender, sexuality, and national history shape literary studies;
- your ability to write and speak effectively for different audiences and purposes.

Upon successful completion of this course:

- You will be more practiced at close reading, using textual details to support critical arguments while understanding the difference between latent and projected textual meaning.
- You will develop a historical sensitivity to textual, contextual, and intertextual literary production.
- You will become familiar with a variety of literary genres—learning to read form as a mode of conveying meaning.
- You will learn to use MLA citation conventions correctly in your writing.

Course Requirements Detailed assignment descriptions are on Canvas

Requirements	Due Date
In-Class and Homework Activities (30%)
These low-stakes activities are designed to help you in your understanding of the texts, critical thinking skills, the writing process, and the papers you will be completing. Participation in discussion is included in in-class activities.	On Going
Close Readings (30%)
Three 3-page close reading papers, worth 10% each, on one of the texts we cover for each unit. You may write on Jane Eyre only once. Specific prompts will be distributed for each paper that will ask you to be very careful readers of a specific textual moment (attending at certain points to literary language) and considering how the particular textual moment produces its meaning.	#1: 4/12 #2: 5/3 #3: 6/3

Discussion Leader (15%)
Each Friday during Weeks 3-9 students will sign up to become discussion leaders, preparing a "lesson" for our class. You will submit Talking Points (1 page) prior to the class and a reflection (1-2 pages) afterwards.	Sign up Week 1 Talking points: 5% Discussion: 5% Reflections: 5%
Archival Project and Presentation (25%)
3-4-page paper on 1-2 primary sources from a digital archive such as One More Voice, Colonial Caribbean, Empire Online, or India Raj and Empire (see Canvas for links). 5-minute presentation of the research on Week 10.	Paper (20%): 6/3 Presentation (5%): Week 10
